

Please do not implement any law that would weaken the strength of Indiana's telephone privacy law. Since being on the Indiana list the number of soliciter phone calls has gone from approximately 8-10 per day to zero. I no longer come home and find my answering machine full of recorded messages and hang ups. The phone does not ring in the middle of my meal time and all through the evening. I know when my phone rings that it is a friend or family member calling for me, not someone trying to sell me something I don't want. I would consider it an invasion of my privacy if a new law were to lessen my no call protection and increase the number of unwanted phone calls. If you want a national law then by all means that would be wonderful for other states that have nothing, but your law should be the minimum and if states want to have stronger protection that should be allowed.
